

2 January 2018

Changes to the OIML Website – www.oiml.org

We are pleased to inform you that we have made a certain number of changes to the OIML Website:

- We have refined the design of the Homepage, including the News section. It is now better structured and with an improved layout.
- Previously, the “My Access” section was under “Structure”. Now, the main menu bar directly displays “My Access” once you are logged in – see the screenshots below:

- We have also grouped together the links under “My Access” into sub-sections. According to your user rights, certain items in these sub-sections will be visible to you, and you should be able to access the same items you could access previously.
- We have removed the “Certificates” section (Basic/MAA), and replaced it with the brand new OIML Certification System (OIML-CS) section, which is directly accessible from the main menu bar.
- We have reviewed and improved the whole submenu structure for easier navigation. Additionally, the item currently being viewed now appears in bold in the left menu panel.

We are updating the set of procedures to reflect these changes and they will be available in due course.

We hope you appreciate these changes, and are always open to suggestions for further enhancement. Please do not hesitate to contact us to share your views.

Kind regards,

The BIML Web Team